

Please continue to keep our phone numbers private. My husband left me just over a year ago. Shortly after he moved out, a telemarketer kept calling my number for him. I have a difficult last name, so he would simply ask for Frank, as if he were a friend. When he had called just after he left, I told him Frank no longer lives here and to take me off their list. (He had called several times before.) Then he called a few weeks later and asked for Frank again, I told him he was not home since it gets frightening living alone in the country and not knowing if someone may be keeping an eye on me or the house. He replied, oh I called and I was told he moved out, has he moved back in? I was terrified as if someone were watching my every move. I demanded to know who it was and eventually he hung up. I could not get the business name or phone, which is at my disadvantage that they have all my information. This was a truly frightening experience and I would of filed a harassment suit had I had any idea who was calling. Please keep this for us. It is scary for single women to deal with this.

Sincerely,,
Cindy Szilagyi